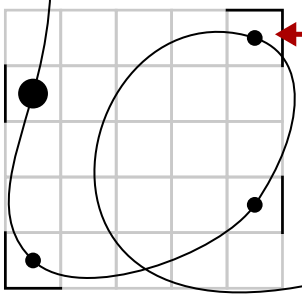
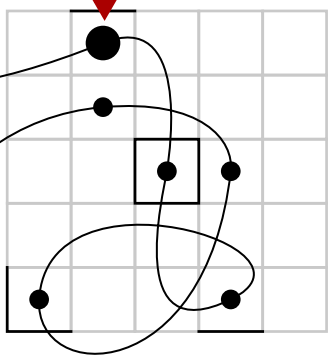
The line forms a sentence.

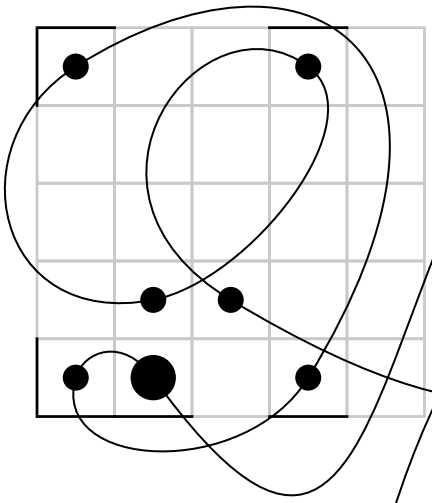
Each square grid contains a word.

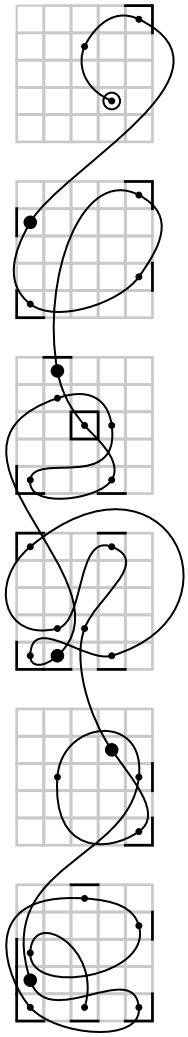


Letters are marked by dots. Large ones indicate the first letter of a word.

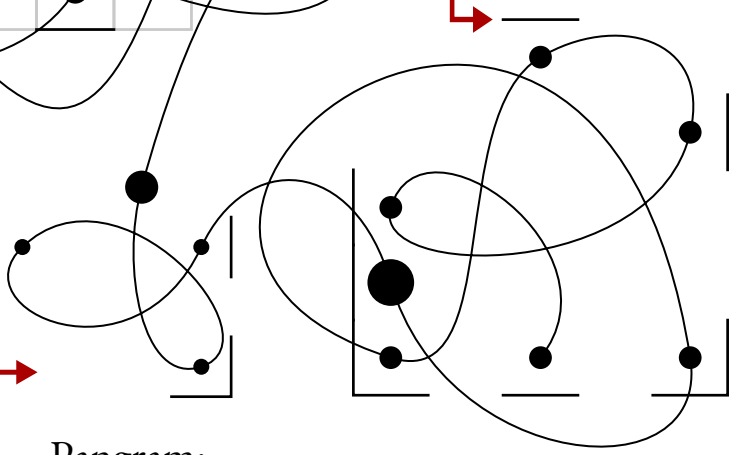
Follow the line to establish the letter order.







Vowels and letters along the border of a word grid have their edges marked ...

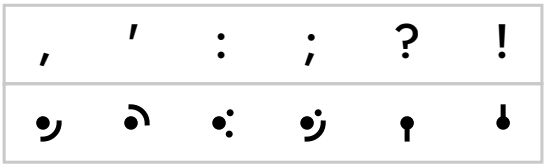


... this is so word grids don't have to be aligned, visible or even the same size to remain legible - edge markings suggest the position of the underlying grid.

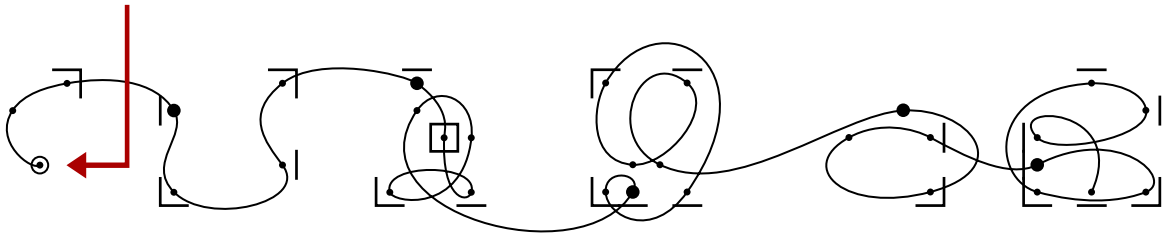
Pangram:

"The five boxing wizards jump quickly."

Capital letters are distinguished by a ring around the dot.



Punctuation can be expressed in a similar way, here are some ideas.



As you can see, the same sentence can be visualised an infinite number of ways - just connect the dots.
